10 steps to protect yourself and your collision claim

Stop.

Remain where you are. Never leave the scene of a collision.

Check surroundings.

Watch for oncoming traffic and turn off the ignition, activate your hazard lights, and set the parking brake. If there are downed power lines, remain in your vehicle until help arrives.

Call for help.

If you need emergency assistance, call 911. Otherwise, contact your local police department to report the collision.

Address injuries.

Keep injured people warm and don't move them unless they're in immediate danger.

Contact your insurance provider.

They will provide important next steps, including which tow truck company to call, body shop to use, and the details you need to start a claim. You may be able to submit your claim and upload documents online, so be sure to check with your insurer.

Gather info.

Once you know everyone is okay, or emergency help is on the way, gather the information needed to file a collision report and complete your insurance claim.

Rake pictures.

Photos provide a before-and-after comparison of your vehicle's condition, as well as evidence of what happened. Include photos of:

- > damage to vehicles
- > all vehicles involved in the collision
- > the scene of the collision > other driver(s) and passengers involved

Get out of the way.

Move your vehicle out of the flow of traffic, if you can do so safely. If it's too damaged to drive, have it towed.

Limit discussion.

Do not discuss responsibility with the other driver. Be courteous, but don't apologize or admit fault. Discuss the collision only with police and your insurance company. Allow your claims adjuster to determine liability.
