

Gregory Cameron

Dr. Gregory Cameron holds a doctorate in Social and Political Thought from York University. He taught his first course at Laurier in 2005 and has since taught numerous courses in Communication Studies and in Cultural Studies, including CS304: Canadian Communication Thought, CS315: Print Communication and Culture, KS100: Studying Popular Culture, and KS203: Popular Culture and Ideology. Dr. Cameron's areas of research interest include the political potential of the Internet, the bureaucratization of the university, and popular culture as event. Dr. Cameron's service labour has included serving as CF representative for the Cultural Studies Program Committee as well as for the Communication Studies program and serving as an Executive Member of WLUFA. Thank you for your teaching and service labour, Dr. Cameron. Congratulations on your induction into Laurier's Century Club! You have influenced how thousands of your students see and interpret our world.

Submitted by Judith Nicolson

Lawrence Howe

Following an undergraduate degree at Carleton University and a Masters degree from Queen's University in Kingston, Lawrence Howe completed a PhD in Mathematics (1992) from Brandeis University in Waltham Massachusetts. Dr. Howe has had appointments at Redemeer University College, McMaster University and, since 2010, Wilfrid Laurier University. Dr. Howe has taught a wide variety of undergraduate mathematics courses at Laurier, readily adopts educational technologies, and has developed automated processes for efficiently teaching large classes. Estimating conservatively, Dr. Howe has taught over 12,000 Laurier students since 2010 --- truly a remarkable impact.

Submitted by Mark Reesor